SCARE FOR SCHOOLS

● Abduction fears as children called into van ● Council reports own staff to police in error

CHIEF REPORTER
NAZIA DEWJI
ndewji@london.newsquest.co.uk

The company in charge of Kingston and Richmond's children's services sparked a cross-borough child abduction scare – after mistakenly reporting its own staff members to police.

Achieving for Children, the social enterprise owned by Richmond and Kingston councils, alerted schools to a man claiming to be “from the council” asking schoolchildren to get into his van to discuss youth activities.

He was said to be wearing a lanyard that looked “homemade” and was parked close to Richard Challoner School in Old Malden, on Monday, February 23.

Schools passed on the warning to parents, via emails and texts, which were then shared on Facebook and Twitter.

A student from the school said at least 12 students had gone inside the van, which had a television screen and a CCTV system.

It has now emerged the individuals were in fact council-sanctioned workers on official business.

Kingston Council confirmed the three people – two men and a woman – were workers from Achieving for Children and a Kingston Council employee.

In an email sent to parents from Richard Challoner last Friday, deputy head-teacher Sean Binns said the council's actions were “not acceptable”.

He said: “In the school's view, individuals stopping students of school age on the street and asking for information, such as home address and phone numbers, is not acceptable.

“As well as this, the situation of inviting them into a van goes against all child protection protocols and advice they would have been given at schools and, I'm sure, by yourselves as parents.”

A parent from Richard Challoner, who did not want to be named, said: “It is unbelievable the council would sanction this – children getting interviewed inside a van. It's just poor practice, isn't it?”

Liberal Democrat councillor for Richmond and London Assembly member for Kingston and Richmond, Stephen Knight, said: “I am not surprised people are alarmed. Achieving for Children and Kingston Council should have alerted schools and parents before embarking on this endeavour.

“This points to an organisation that does not know what it is doing.”

But Conservative councillor for Richmond and London Assembly member for Kingston and Richmond, Tony Arbour, said: “I have no doubt that Achieving for Children has learned a valuable lesson from this.”

A spokesman from Achieving for Children said: “Achieving for Children always investigates any reports of suspicious activity around schools as a matter of urgency, including reporting it to the police, and informing other schools in the vicinity.

“A very speedy investigation revealed this was legitimate council workers carrying out their duties. Schools were informed very quickly.

“We are looking at our processes now to see how we can avoid any confusion like this in the future, and Achieving for Children apologises for any concern or upset this situation has caused.”

Owners take the lead in bid for Crufts top dog

REPORTER

RACHAEL BURFORD

rachael.burford@london.newsquest.co.uk

A celebration of the best looking and most talented pooches in the country starts this week, and five dog owners from Kingston will be hoping their pets have what it takes to win a coveted first place ribbon at Crufts.

For four days dogs from across the country will compete in different categories at the annual competition.

Bullmastiffs, King Charles spaniels, bearded collies and retrievers will all be representing Kingston in the event hosted by the Kennel Club, from today, March 5.

Jacque Thomas, who runs Barnfield Riding School, has entered her two flat coated retrievers, Sasha and Mawgan – and hopes they will be bringing home ribbons.

She said: "Sasha and Mawgan are trained gun dogs as well as show dogs. With them being working dogs too an extra amount of preparation goes into getting ready for the competition."

At eight years old Sasha is a Crufts veteran, winning a third ribbon at Crufts last year.

Mrs Thomas insisted it was all in the training when trying to develop a champion dog.

She said: "Preparing for the competition is extremely hard work."

"I have a professional trainer in Kent that I go to and it's not easy fitting that in, along with running a professional riding school."

"But it is all worth it and the training is a fantastic way to be out with your dog."

"It's not just the dogs who are learning, you're also being trained in how to work with your animals."

"The more I learn the better it gets."

Grassed-up dealer jailed

A drug dealer who tried to palm a "customer" off with garden grass instead of cannabis was caught out when the customer told police he had been robbed.

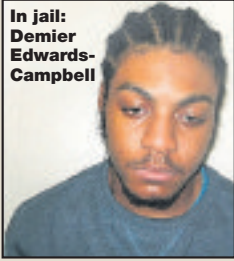

Demier Edwards-Campbell was jailed for three-and-a-half years on Friday, February 20, after being found guilty of possession with intent to supply class A drugs following a trial at Kingston Crown Court.

The 21-year-old's narcotics enterprise came to an end when police were called to Brighton Road in May 2014 to reports of a robbery.

Officers then discovered the "victim" had arranged to meet Edwards-Campbell to buy cannabis, and had paid the dealer £225 before realising he had been fobbed off with garden grass.

Police later found more than 100 wraps of heroin and crack cocaine at Edwards-Campbell's home address in Inner Park Road, Southfields.

Detective Constable Paul Lawlor, from Kingston police, said: "Had we not been alerted by his irate client we may never have discovered the subsequent class A drugs at his home address."

Man swung crutch to fight off knife attacker

CHIEF REPORTER

ndewji@
london.newsquest.co.uk

A man has said he was lucky to be alive after he was knifed twice in the chest on a night out in Kingston.

The man, who had been on crutches following a motorbike accident two weeks earlier, called the Kingston Guardian from his bed in St George's Hospital in Tooting, and appealed for help to find his attackers.

The 25-year-old, who did not want to be named, said he had been at the cinema with his girlfriend and another couple.

He said they were approached by three men on their way to their car, parked in Canbury Place car park.

He said: "At first they just seemed drunk, and seemed to be being friendly. Then it just went off. I don't know what was going on. I was confused."

"I just took one of my crutches and started swinging it. I didn't know I'd been stabbed until I saw the knife. I thought I'd just been pushed."

He said he had been stabbed twice in the left side of the chest. He has since been discharged from hospital.

He added: "I've been lucky. The doctors said it almost hit my heart."

Police were called to Canbury Park Road by the junction with Elm Crescent, near the former Gala Bingo hall and Acorn 20 pub, at about 12.30am on Sunday, February 22.

The area was later cordoned off by police.

Officers are now searching for the men.

The first was described by the victim as aged between 19 and 20, about 5ft 5in, slim and wearing dark clothing.

The second man was described as mixed race, in his early 20s, with an afro, about 6ft and wearing a light-coloured shirt.

A third man, also believed to be in his early 20s, was about 5ft 10in and possibly white.

Residents in Canbury Park Road reported hearing shouting. Officers have conducted door-to-door enquiries and are looking at CCTV footage.

They also took the victim's phone.

Detective Inspector Adam Guttridge, from Kingston police, said: "We are just examining the victim's phone for any links."

"It is not unusual to take a phone as part of our investigations."

Anyone with information should call Kingston police on 101 or Crimestoppers, anonymously on 0800 555 111.

Bar's licence suspended for trading after hours

A Surbiton bar had its licence suspended for two weeks and its supervisor removed from her role.

Vinoteque, in Claremont Road, was hauled before Kingston Council by police after a string of breaches that culminated on New Year's Eve when officers shut down a late-running party.

Patrons had written to police ahead of the hearing to praise the work of supervisor Larisa Noaca in creating a "positive [and] welcoming vibe" in a previously unpopular location.

The ruling by councillors on Tuesday, February 24, was subject to appeal within 21 days after written notification was served.

Miss Noaca said she would remain as manager and that she planned to use the two-week closure to refurbish the bar.

She said: "It's going to take a long time to change all the bad reputation from before."

"We're a different way. I'm working 24 hours [a day] making sure everything is alright. It's not easy."

Councillor Andrew Day, vice-chairman of the council's licensing sub-committee, said: "I know she is doing her best and we don't want to be complete killjoys."

The bar's opening hours have also been cut, meaning it will have to close at midnight on Friday and Saturday nights.

Staff must also be given extra training.

PC Jim Hartland, from Kingston police's licensing team, said: "We had tried hard to work with the existing premises supervisor at this venue to ensure they operated within the law."

"However, despite our efforts, the management blatantly ignored their licensing conditions, trading after hours. As such we were left with little choice, but to take the premises to review."

"We are satisfied with the outcome."

Nursing neglected home back to health

REPORTER

jon.sharman@london.newsquest.co.uk

This is the vision for a renovated Victorian-era nurses' home in Surbiton.

Newlands, in Oak Hill, was left to rot by the NHS years ago.

The theft of lead cladding from a section of the roof meant water simply poured in, destroying the timbers.

But residents were given a glimpse of how the tucked-away corner of Surbiton could look, with an additional three blocks built in traditional style.

The disused Oak Hill medical centre – itself now just a shell – was opened to show off the plans, which would see some 41 flats created in the leafy neighbourhood, served by underground parking.

Matthew Allchurch, of Teddington-based MAA Architects, said: "We started off with an analysis of the buildings in the area and there are some very nice Victorian villas.

"We picked up on a lot of the features in those buildings, such as gables and bays.

"By putting the parking underground it means you can landscape the street with lawns and new oak trees."

Neighbour Brian Young said he was concerned about parking provision for visitors, and the size of the buildings.

He said: "I think we are going to get a feeling like there's an enormous mass at the end of the road.

But he added: "I think the appearance of them is good."

Two of the new buildings will be erected on the medical centre site. The eyesore building is to be demolished – news that delighted residents.

The third will go up on the corner of Oak Hill and Oak Hill Road.

New site owner Daniel de Marsillac, of Glane Properties, said: "We want something that is long-lasting. Like Newlands it will stand the test of time.

"We think it is right to put some oaks back in Oak Hill."

'Honour' killing campaigner's TV interview

A campaigner against "honour"-based violence and forced marriage who witnessed a plot to murder her sister-in-law is the subject of a new documentary.

Sarbjit Kaur Athwal, of Kingston, told the Crime and Investigations channel how her sister-in-law Surjit was murdered on the orders of her mother-in-law in 1998, in a programme broadcast on Sunday.

In 2007 Bachan Athwal, of Hayes, west London, was sentenced to life for arranging the killing, alongside her son Sukhdave – Surjit's husband in an arranged marriage.

Campaigner Ms Athwal, who has won awards for her work, became the first person to give evidence in open court in an "honour" killing trial.

She told how she lived in fear of her life for a number of years before the probe into Surjit's death was re-opened.

Speaking of the documentary, she said: "It was really, really tough because of all the emotions.

"On TV they want the real you to come out – the real person – and to remember everything so it is really painful and emotional. It was hard to speak to a camera, but I want to make people aware."

Ms Athwal has also set up a charity to create awareness about "honour" killings. Visit truehonour.org.uk.

Traffic camera plans shelved

Kingston Council has backtracked on plans to install more lucrative traffic cameras that would potentially have raked in an extra £380,000 in one year.

The council's draft budget, released earlier this year, outlined plans to spend £140,000 on new, unattended cameras to catch drivers in bus lanes and box junctions.

But the proposal has been omitted from the finalised budget, and instead a review of the borough's existing car parking and traffic cameras will be launched.

Councillor David Cunningham, lead member for environment and transport, said: "The top answer for residents when asked about how we could improve their local area in our recent All in One survey was to address parking issues.

"We are determined to respond to this." The planned review will include parking charges, penalty charge notices, enforcement technology, ticketing systems, controlled parking zones, the website and car park management.

Last year, our sister paper the Surrey Comet revealed the council made close to £1.5m in traffic penalties, including fines from box junctions and bus lanes.

Step-free travel

RACHAEL BURFORD

Fans of a particular American breakfast treat who do not reside close to Kingston could be in trouble – because the owner of the borough's first cereal bar claims he has bought the country's entire stock.

The Cereal Bar, in Fife Road, officially opened last month, selling many varieties of cereal and 14 different milk options.

That apparently includes the UK's entire supply of Hershey's Cookies 'n' Cream, according to owner Ramon Mullan.

Mr Mullan already owns Shake

House in Epsom and decided to open the new cafe because of his obsession with cereal.

He said the cafe will be aimed at students and, as well as selling cereal and milkshakes, crisp sandwiches are also on the menu.

He said: "I thought Kingston really needed a place aimed at students.

"It's not going to be just cereal and crisps – we're also selling milkshakes and we're going to have things like a retro gaming night once a week.

"I've also bought all of the Hershey's Cookies 'n' Cream cereal from all the stockists in the country, so I think I'm the only person selling it."

The new bar follows in the footsteps of the Cereal Killer Cafe, which opened in Brick Lane, Shoreditch, four months ago, to mixed reviews.

Mr Mullan insisted that he has learned from some of its mistakes.

He said: "I really like the Cereal Killer Cafe and have been there five or six times.

"But my prices are cheaper and we do milkshakes and crisps.

"I'm really into the marketing side of things and I think that Kingston is a great place to open this sort of business."

Customers can expect to pay £2.70 a bowl for two kinds of cereal, as well as their choice of milk.

A single Pop Tart will set you back £1.50.

Exhibition shows proposed homes and retail space

Peel site's flats and shops are unveiled

CHIEF REPORTER

NAZIA DEWJI

ndewji@
london.newsquest.co.uk

Plans for a new housing development at the site of a once-famed live music venue in Kingston went on display last week.

The Sir Robert Peel pub, in Cambridge Road, which has hosted the likes of the Vaccines, Jamie T and John Newman, shut down in April last year.

Cobham-based developer URB Group, which bought the site last year, officially unveiled its plans at a public exhibition at Kingsmeadow last week.

The land, on the corner of Cambridge Road and Hampden Road, is now set to become a mixed-use development with 31 private and affordable homes of up to three bedrooms, with 200sq m of ground floor retail space.

Harry Hall, head of the Cambridge Road Estate Residents' Association, said: "On first impression it was quite a nice looking building. I think it will blend in with the estate."

"But because of the amount of private housing in Kingston it would be nice to see a more community approach with some social housing. They appear to be taking a community approach."

Artist's impression:

He added he was positive about plans for greenery around the site too.

Andrew Davies, from URB Group, said: "We are very pleased at the number of people who took the time to come and view our plans for the site. We received some very valuable feedback."

"As we move towards submitting a planning application this spring, the project team remain committed to working closely with Kingston and consulting members of the community.

"We believe that delivering much-needed new homes and flexible commercial space, through this mixed use scheme, will contribute positively to the ongoing regeneration in the borough."

But Jill Preston, from the Cambridge Road estate, said: "I am waiting for the planning application to come in."

"I think the problem is going to be parking in the area."

The exhibition outlined plans for 19 car parking spaces, including two disabled ones, across two levels and 35 cycle spaces.

Changes to care: Tolworth, Springfield and Queen Mary's hospitals

Deadlinepix KT80190/WA26004

Mental care shake-up

REPORTER

jon.sharman@london.newsquest.co.uk

Mental health workers will know within weeks where, or if, they will be moved in a £160m shake-up of service provision.

Doctors and NHS England bosses will scrutinise surveys carried out by South West London and St George's Mental Health Trust (SWLSTG), which runs Tolworth and Springfield hospitals, that were designed to guide a revamp of "unsuitable" facilities.

The trust's preferred plan, of centralising all care in Springfield and Tolworth, would be funded by selling land.

The changes could mean patients are no longer seen at Queen Mary's Hospital in Roehampton, which treats 500 people a year.

It was revealed last summer that SWLSTG planned to reduce inpatient beds across south-west London by 10 per cent before 2018, and treat more people in the community.

Results of a consultation, published last week, will be weighed up by NHS England and GPs on clinical commissioning groups (CCGs) over the next three weeks.

Dr Phil Moore, from Kingston CCG, said: "We are still delivering some mental health services using buildings first constructed over 150 years ago.

"We compromise on the dignity and respect of the people we look after at an incredibly vulnerable time in their lives.

"We compromise on the motivation of our staff by demanding their very highest standards while asking them to work in an environment we know is difficult."

SWLSTG bosses admitted in a planning application for new buildings at Tolworth that "none of the wards are fully compliant with modern standards."

They said the preferred revamp plan will save £26m over 50 years and improve conditions.

The trust, which covers Kingston, Merton, Sutton, Richmond and Wandsworth, is battling for foundation trust status, which confers greater financial independence. It must make a £32m spending cut by 2020.

The consultation results were due to be debated at a Kingston CCG meeting on March 3, as we went to press.

Wandsworth CCG will hold its meeting on March 11 at its offices in Upper Richmond Road, East Putney, at 9.30am.

A final decision on which plan to implement will be taken at the end of March by the cross-borough joint health overview and scrutiny committee.

Homes on filling station site

Plans to redevelop an old petrol station in Surbiton have been revealed.

The Brighton Road site, pictured, has been closed since September last year after it was sold by owners Rontec.

Developers Indigo Scott have submitted two schemes to Kingston Council.

The first is a three-to-four-storey building containing 32 homes.

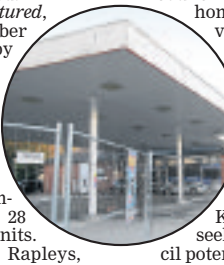

The alternative is a very similar building containing 28 homes and two commercial units.

Indigo Scott's agents, Rapleys, claimed in documents submitted to the council that creating affordable homes in this scheme was "not viable".

Kingston's housing strategy says that any development of more than 10 homes should be 50 per cent affordable.

A Rapleys statement said: "Indigo Scott recognises the importance of affordable housing within the Kingston area and therefore seeks to discuss with the council potential options."

Affordable homes 'not viable' for petrol station developer

Tough. They knew the affordable housing rules when they bought it. If they paid too much for the site, then that's their problem, not ours. Affordable housing – genuinely affordable – is in such short supply, there's no way that these property developers should be let off the hook.

Vulnerable to be hit by higher care costs

Last November, Kingston Council decided to consult on an increase in the cost of contributions from those receiving non-residential care and support.

This will affect 320 people. The cost impact for the majority will be an extra £10 to £30 a week.

However, some face a £40 to £60 increase.

Why are estimated savings already included in the council's budget that will be set before the consultation is even over and no decision made?

Why have officers not followed the outline consultation process agreed by councillors?

Committees discussed the budget before service users and carers were told of the proposed increase.

Four years ago, the previous administration proposed a hike from 50 per cent to 100 per cent.

Under pressure from campaigning service users and supporters, this was reduced to 75 per cent.

Call me cynical, but I suspect that political party, now in opposition, to champion those hit by this proposal.

Councillors, whatever your political group, please read the on-line scrutiny panel minutes of January 2011 and consider previous representations and panel comments, particularly on budget priorities, moral responsibility and formulating consultation procedures.

The estimated savings are not that great in relation to the council's budget of millions, but will impact hugely on those affected.

How can you set a budget reliant on the introduction of a new contributions policy?

Is there a back-up if this shoddy consultation exercise, with no equality impact assessment so far, is legally challenged?

Have lower increases even been costed?

Is it right, or does it make sense to look for additional income for adult social care by increasing contributions from people needing support themselves?

I hope the council will not balance its books at their expense. Most other London councils may well ask for 100 per cent.

I would like to think Kingston is unlike most.

Let us hear no more in the future on caring for the elderly and the vulnerable from anyone who votes for this 25 per cent increase.

Legacy of opting out of 'London'

Ian Kirkpatrick questioned why bus services between Epsom and the Surbiton and Chessington areas are scarce, compared with those to Kingston (Epsom should be more accessible by public transport, February 26).

The answer is that 50 years ago this April, Epsom and Ewell opted out of becoming part of the newly formed Greater London. As a result, its residents and businesses do not contribute to the funding of Transport for London (TfL).

Indeed, for a location outside Greater London, Epsom is quite well served, with six TfL routes, including two from Kingston and Surbiton (406, 418), and two (166, 293) continuing to the hospital.

MP has fight on his hands

The Liberal Democrats have started their election campaign, mainly being negative towards the Conservative Party, which is no surprise.

They are commenting on the Tory candidate, saying that he does not live in the borough. However, it is not uncommon for candidates to live outside of the borough.

If elected, they normally move into the borough.

Winston Churchill did not live in boroughs he was elected for.

MP Ed Davey also comments about housing developments that the Conservative Party may pass.

He is fully aware that councils have to meet Government housing targets.

If Mr Davey is so against these types of developments and housing figures that have to be met by councils, why does he not speak out in Parliament for the whole country?

How about the new recycling system that will be introduced in 2016 in the borough?

Again, Mr Davey did not speak out about the system that his own party brought in when met with negative feedback, nor did he support Eric Pickles, who wanted councils to bring back weekly collections.

It would seem the MP picks and chooses what he wants to get involved in regarding local issues, when his job is on the line.

Mr Davey continues to campaign about re-zoning Surbiton station, without success – a topic he brings out at every election campaign.

Instead of trying to point out the faults with the Conservative Party, why does he not point out where his party has failed and why?

A prime example – why did the Lib Dems back track on uni fees?

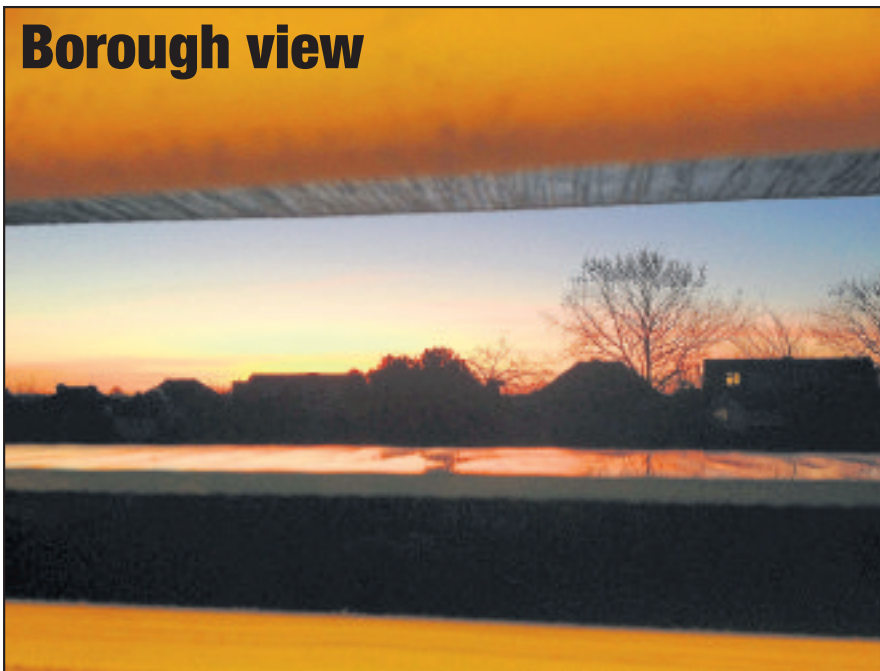

A poll for the Evening Standard put the Lib Dems on 6 per cent of the vote.

His new slogan should read: "Can the Lib Dems win here?"

It would seem that this time Mr Davey may actually have a fight on his hands to save his job.

School plans are best of a bad job

The council's south of the borough committee recently considered the application to rebuild Tolworth Girls' School, with large housing to pay for it, and is aiming to get a recommendation to the development control committee (DCC), which will decide on it.

Given the educational need, but also that the plan is more the best of a bad job than a marriage made in heaven, no outright opposition, but some reservations, were made.

The site is at the heart of Tolworth and Hook Rise ward. Of its three councillors, one is on the DCC and rightly abstained from any discussion. Another mentioned problems for [nearby] roads. The third, Councillor Thay Thayan, said nothing very detectable.

If Coun Thayan is to more fully represent this ward, I would have expected more involvement – there is plenty to be said.

For example, the housing is to go at the east end of the site, away from the school, but next to residential roads, though separated from them. Its only full access is to run near the school.

However, if before or during building, the developers or the school – or, later, the inhabitants or the school – complain of this, eyeing a tempting gateway to the adjacent close – will Coun Thayan spring to its defence?

This is not entirely hypothetical – it was mooted before.

He should reply publically before the DCC meets, to rectify his reticence.

Higher Education in Further Education College – Widening participation and opening doors

Rukhsana Aslam - Foundation Degree in Education and Learning
 I chose to study at Carshalton College as they deliver a Foundation Degree that is relevant to my job at a time that is convenient for me to study. That flexibility, being able to study part time makes working and learning achievable.

I am enjoying studying alongside like-minded people in similar circumstances to me. We all work in the same field and are able to share experiences, challenges and good practice. It has been a great confidence builder and I have become more self-assured and assertive at work as I can relate what I learn in the classroom to my workplace. Carshalton College is a brilliant place to study, the teaching is excellent, the tutors are very helpful and the lectures are interesting and well prepared.

If you are thinking about doing a Foundation Degree – go for it, there is a lot to be gained.

Adam Wicks - Foundation Degree in Education and Learning
 Wanting to become a Primary School Teacher was a natural progression for me from my youth work as a sports coach. I am currently a Teaching Assistant but my professional ambition is to be a fully qualified Teacher, that's why I chose to do a Foundation Degree at Carshalton College as it allows me to study in the evening and at weekends whilst I continue to do my day job. It is great to study with like-minded people and share our work based experiences, but one of the biggest plus points for me is being able to apply what I learn at College back in the classroom. The teaching at Carshalton College is high quality and lessons are thoroughly planned and well researched. If you are a Teaching Assistant and you want to be a Teacher then go for it. The Foundation Degree allows you to work and learn at the same time and all the experience you gain at work helps you with your assignments.

A MODERN ROMANCE

Director Sally Cookson talks to RACHAEL BURFORD about Romeo and Juliet, that has started its run at the Rose Theatre

It is one of the best-known, studied, analysed and reimagined stage plays in history.

So what new angle can the Rose Theatre possibly bring to Romeo and Juliet?

All was revealed last weekend when the team behind the adaptation of Jacqueline Wilson's Hetty Feather returned with a brave new staging of the Shakespeare classic.

The timeless story of the star-crossed lovers – played by Audrey Brisson and Joseph Drake – is being given a modern twist by director Sally Cookson, who has staged her version in the present day and changed the genders of some of the main character.

Most notably, the sharp-tongued Mercutio is played by a woman (Laura Elphinstone) and Juliet has a possessive and intrusive mother (Maureen Beattie) instead of a father.

Cookson says: "Because we are setting our version in modern times there is no reason why Romeo's best friend couldn't be a woman and Juliet couldn't be dominated by a strong matriarchal character rather than her father."

"We are setting it in a contemporary environment because it is a story that could be set at any time so why not set it in the modern day, in a place that our audiences all recognise?"

"Despite the modern setting though we have made sure that the production still has its poetic innocence.

"We had to make sure that nothing was lost from the romance of the tale."

Cookson's last Rose production, the aforementioned Hetty Feather, featured some spectacular acrobatics and circus tricks. It was a huge success and enjoyed a brief stint in the West End.

Can audiences expect a similarly energetic reimagining of Shakespeare's great tragedy? Perhaps.

Cookson says: "The Rose layout lends itself so well to epic stories. Our version is a very visual production, telling the story through movement and not just relying in the traditional text."

"The Rose feels really intimate and the stage is wonderfully epic. This is one of the most famous and tragic love stories of all time and there is no better place to stage it than the Rose."

EXPLORING Milton's MIND

Picture: Steve Ullathorne

King of one-line comedy Milton Jones is turning towards story-based humour for his new Temple of Daft tour. Nick Hitchens caught up with him.

Nick Hitchens: Your new tour is called The Temple of Daft. Why?

Milton Jones: Previous tours have been lots of jokes in different forms, but basically lots of jokes. This is more of a story, more like one of my radio shows. It loosely, and I say loosely, follows a kind of adventure-archaeology type story. It started off with me noticing that I had the same surname as Indiana Jones, and it transpired from there.

NH: This narrative style is a bit of a departure. What brought that on?

MJ: Two things. When people see you on telly, they want to come and see the same sort of thing when they see a live show, but obviously not the same jokes. Moving to a narrative was a way of keeping the same style. It begins to mine other areas of jokes as well, in terms of, if you can do a scene where you're talking between two people – even though I'm the only person there – that's a different sort of writing than just one-liner after one-liner.

NH: How do you prepare for a tour?

MJ: I'm amassing jokes from the moment my last tour begins, and then once it finishes, I begin to go to little out-of-the-way places to test them. Generally speaking, the further you travel, the more pleased they are to see you. I will go with bits of paper and ideas, and it will be throwing mud against a wall and seeing what sticks. Years ago I started as an actor, and

I'd quite like to incorporate more of it. For instance, previously the footprint of the tour has been I've gone on and done 15 minutes as a character, and then there's a support act, and then I do the whole second half. There's a different character this tour. Previously, I've done my grandad, but this will be a different relative.

NH: Who?

MJ: This is my uncle, my great-uncle, Sir Randolph Digby Jones. He's an explorer.

NH: Has being known as the king of the one-liner ever been an encumbrance at all?

MJ: I've got to be grateful. People want to put you in a box, so that originally it's people who are booking gigs; they want to know what type of comedian you are to fit on a bill. I'm sort of grateful for where it's got me, but if I go for an audition for another show, albeit a sitcom or something, it's quite often as the crazy neighbour. You think, "well, I'm glad I've got this audition", but it'd be nice not to have to do that role forever. So, I suppose this show is me trying to move things on.

NH: A lot of your stuff is family friendly, and you're sometimes called a Christian comedian – do you think going against the flow has served you well?

MJ: I'm just doing what I would find funny myself, hopefully. And I think it is true that I get a very wide demographic, as a result, coming to my tours, because... it's partly having done Mock the Week and Radio 4, those two ends of the human life scale. And it's kind of accessible in a way that people feel happy to come as entire families.

Did you know?

Milton Jones was a writer on the BBC's sitcom Not Going Out, starring Lee Mack.

This show is me trying to move things on kingstonguardian.co.uk/homes

It seems that every week there is another story of a letting agent failing its clients in some way, be it as a result of malpractice, financial negligence or incompetence.

Giraffe Residential is the latest agent to have let its clients down, after closing without warning at the end of last year.

Trading standards and police are currently investigating the company. In the meantime, other agents such as Leaders have been assisting landlords and tenants with their tenancies.

Leaders' Surbiton branch manager, Amy Claydon, said: "There have been many such cases in south-west London over the last five years, where agents have closed suddenly without returning thousands of pounds worth of tenants' deposits. Ultimately it is the landlord who is legally liable to return their tenant's deposit at the end of the tenancy, even if their agent has lost the money."

"With letting agents not formally regulated by the government, it is up to the public to look into the competency and trustworthiness of their agent before renting or letting with them. But there are so many different bodies and organisations governing standards in the industry that it's no wonder most people are completely bewildered by it all.

"A common problem is small agents rapidly building their portfolios and business on the basis of cheap deals, which means they are not able to sustain a good service to all their clients long-term."

"To keep it simple, our advice is to look at the following factors:"

- 1) How long has the agent been established and do they have a good local reputation?
- 2) Does the agent have professional, knowledgeable staff and a well-presented office?
- 3) Does the firm have enough experienced staff to provide a quality service through all stages of the lettings process?
- 4) Is the agent willing to put you in touch with existing clients for an endorsement, preferably clients who have used the company for a long time?
- 5) Does the agent have systems in place to ensure it complies with the law at all times?
- 6) Is the firm a member of self-regulating organisations such as ARLA, TPO and SAFEagent?

Hamerlaine hammers home advantage

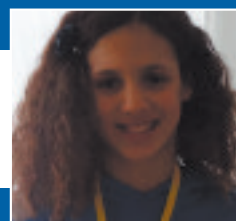

Kingston Royals' Yasmine Hamerlaine struck double gold to round off the Surrey Swimming Championships in style.

The 12-year-old, right, won the U12 girls' 50m freestyle and backstroke disciplines as the club collected 12 medals on the championships' final weekend at Crystal Palace.

Dylan Conway (U15 boys 50m butterfly) and Lucy Hawley (U15 girls 50m butterfly) also struck gold.

Cap-tastic: Sarah Haycroft

Team GB cap is priceless

Surbiton Ladies captain Sarah Haycroft might earn in a year less than 4 per cent of what England footballer Wayne Rooney collects in a week, but she says you cannot put a price on representing Team GB, writes Stuart Amos.

The 23-year-old is preparing for the World League semi-finals in Spain later this year, where Team GB hope to secure qualification for the 2016 Olympics.

Haycroft helped her club side remain unbeaten in the WHL Premier Division this season with a 3-2 win at Beeston on Saturday.

Surbiton host Clifton on Saturday knowing victory would all but secure them top spot in the table and automatic qualification for European competition next term ahead of the end of season play-offs.

"We have to pay to have hockey shown on television let alone have companies out bid each other for the right to show our sport," she writes in her exclusive column for the Surrey Comet.

"Football can command £5.136 billion for television rights because of its popularity and the amount of revenue it creates.

"It shows how influential sport can be in our nation and it gives us hope that one day can capture the people's imagination in the same way.

"What binds us all together is being lucky enough to play sport as a career and the proudest moment of any athlete's life is representing their country."

SPORTSbrief

LATE SHOW: Corinthian Casuals' Dave Hodges struck in the 95th minute to secure a third successive victory for boss Matt Howard's men with a 3-2 triumph at play-off chasing Whyteleafe on Saturday. Jamie Byatt and Juevan Spencer had put Casuals 2-0 up at half time, but Whyteleafe levelled matters before Hodges struck.

Former Kingstonian academy manager Neil Hams has been humbled by the support of the football family after having motor neurone disease diagnosed earlier this year.

The 37-year-old, who helped older brother Mark lead Walton Casuals to a record Ryman Division One South finish last season, first showed signs of the illness over the summer.

But it was not until January that the extent of the problem was known after tests at St George's Hospital in Tooting.

A club statement from Casuals over the weekend officially broke the news with Hams senior – former assistant to Alan Dowson at Kingstonian – organising a benefit day to be held at Waterside Drive on May 10.

Social media has been flooded by messages of support for Neil from across the non-League game.

"You build up a football family during your career," said Neil.

"We're still friends with people we played with when we were kids.

"You meet so many people throughout your career it hasn't surprised me, but it has been very humbling. It is surreal.

"I'm not all that comfortable with the attention because I am a shy guy, but it is lovely everyone is there supporting you because there are not many people in my situation who have that.

"It keeps your spirits up."

He added: "In pre-season I could still kick a ball about, but I was feeling a little slower than normal and more tired.

"I started noticing more problems and took three weeks off work over Christmas hoping that would sort me out.

"I went back to work and two days later was off again.

"It was not until the end of January that the condition was confirmed.

"Now it is a case of arresting the development of symptoms and slowing the progress of the illness."

Mark Hams has had an overwhelming response to the Neil Hams Benefit Day he has organised, which will include a football match featuring one or two famous faces among a host of familiar non-League footballers from the area.

The former Ks assistant described hearing of his brother's illness as a bolt from the blue and has pledged to stand by his brother.

"When I first found out I couldn't think of anything else. It was a massive shock," added the 38-year-old.

"But this is not about me. I've hardened myself to it very quickly.

"We cannot run away from it. We have to face up to it.

"My brother and I did everything together and we are so close.

"In the summer holidays it was football, fishing or golf – that is all we did.

"He has been at my shoulder all my life.

"This illness can progress very quickly and he didn't want to have any regrets and I want to help him do all things he has wanted to do, while he is still able.

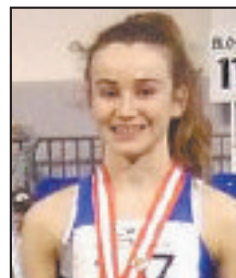

"There will be live music, face painting, children's entertainer and a football match.

"We know so many people and so many people have said they will play, so we may have to tinker with the format a little bit, but it should be a great day."

The Neil Hams Day will take place at Walton Casuals on May 10 and starts at noon.

Winning habit: Kingston's Pippa Earley

Pippa hits top Earley

Kingston & Polytechnic Harrier Pippa Earley hit the top of the UK long jump rankings on Saturday, writes Stuart Amos.

The 14-year-old leapt 5.55m to win English Indoor Championships U15 girls' gold medal – adding to the English 75m sprint hurdle outdoor title she won last summer.

It is the fourth best jump of all time from a UK U15 girl and ranks Earley as the number one long jumper in the country in that age group.

Earley, coached by John Shepherd and a student at Notre Dame School in Elmbridge, will compete at the national pentathlon championships in Sheffield on March 14.

Tolfrey bounces back as Ks secure draw

Goalkeeper Rob Tolfrey starred for Kingstonian on Saturday, despite being the subject of a Football Association disciplinary investigation, writes Stuart Amos.

The 27-year-old shotstopper, who was reported to the FA after tussling with away fans in the wake of last week's 2-1 defeat to Bognor Regis Town, pulled off the save of the match as Ks hung on for a 3-3 draw with title chasing Margate on Saturday.

Boss Tommy Williams' men had led 3-1 through goals from Sam Page, Pelayo Pico Gomez and captain Alan Inns, before Steve Laidler's 45th minute sending off.

Margate hit back through

Great stuff: Ks captain Alan Inns, above, hooks home his side's third goal on Saturday and, right, goalkeeper Rob Tolfrey between the sticks at the weekend

Charlie Wassmer – seconds later – and ex-K Ryan Moss after the break and needed

Tolfrey to save from Lewis Taylor and earn a draw.

"He's just shown what a professional character he truly is," said Williams of his keeper.

Slipping

Surbiton's men slipped off the top of the MHL Premier Division despite a 4-2 win at Beeston.

Goals from Rupert Shipperley, Alan Forsyth (two) and Chris Grassick secured maximum points on Sunday, but East Grinstead's 9-0 triumph over Brooklands Manchester University put them top on goals scored.

Head coach Todd Williams takes his side to Hampstead & Westminster on Sunday.
